Jabal Al-Ahmar (The Red Mountain): So called because of its reddish sandstone, and contains up to 18 tombs with beautiful inscriptions and carvings that illustrate Nabataean customs of burial.

Jabal Al-Banat (Mountain of the Daughters): A site with over 30 tombs said to belong to prominent Nabataean women, adorned with motifs and Thamudic inscriptions.

Diwan and Jabal Ithlib: Jabal Ithlib, a holy mountain, lies next to the Diwan, a rock-hewn hall where political and spiritual gatherings take place. A narrow passageway leads to a ceremonial path reminiscent of Petra's Siq.
